CPC Manager Wins National Manufacturing Leadership Award

Lucy Lee one of 130 U.S. women recognized with Women MAKE Award

St. Paul, Minn. – March 2, 2023 – Lucy Lee, manufacturing manager at CPC \(Colder Products Company\), has been named a 2023 Women MAKE Awards honoree. The Manufacturing Institute program recognizes women who have demonstrated excellence and leadership in manufacturing careers. Lee manages a multi-site manufacturing cleanroom team of supervisors, operators, team leads, cell leads and technicians at CPC's facility in Roseville, Minn.

“Lucy has done a remarkable job in motivating and managing teams in their everyday work and through exceptional circumstances, like the huge uptick that occurred in our biopharmaceutical business during the pandemic,” said Janel Wittmayer, CPC president. “She is an excellent role model and mentor for her teammates and a shining example of how women effectively lead major manufacturing operations.”

Lee joined CPC in 2019. Since then, she has worked in nearly every role that she now supervises. This hands-on experience as she advanced her career helps her lead with both empathy and expertise. She also focuses on providing each team member a voice in the manufacturing process, which has contributed to quality improvement, more streamlined hand-offs between shifts, and a highly collaborative team. Like Lee, many of CPC's talented production leaders and team members originally came from other countries. She says her experiences have led her to do what she can to empower others to achieve their career goals.

Lee is one of 130 women recognized with this year's award. The program honors outstanding women at all levels of the manufacturing industry, from the factory floor to the C-suite. Women MAKE aims to close the gender gap in manufacturing by increasing the number of women to 35% by 2030.
